The NASA Space Radiation Laboratory (NSRL) has been in operation since the summer of 2003. Through the past 10 years, the facility has undergone numerous upgrades in an effort to better serve the needs of its research community. Logistical procedures by which the NSRL runs have also evolved with the goal of streamlining operations and improving efficiency. Not surprisingly, there will be additional changes in some areas for 2014, and these will be discussed. Most importantly, this will also be an opportunity to provide the NSRL user community with a chance to raise concerns, make suggestions and ask questions with regard to the facility.
